Allen Dulles Given Praise

Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Rep.

Robert C. McEwen today praised the "dedicated public service" of former central intelligence Director Allen W. Dulles, who died here at the age of 75 Wednesday night.

The congressman said: "For his long and able service to his country Allen Dulles was revered by the people of America. Member of a family that has given us so many able and dedicated public servants, his distinguished career added to the esteem in which the name of Dulles is held by his countrymen."

"A native of Watertown, his passing brings an added measure of loss for northern New Yorkers."

Sen. Charles E. Goodell of New York said he was "deeply saddened to learn of the untimely passing of Allen Dulles. He served our country and, indeed, the world above and beyond the call of duty. I am especially proud that he ranks high on the list of New Yorkers who have done so much for their fellow men."

Sen. Jacob K. Javits said: "Allen Dulles' service to the nation spanned the administrations of presidents of both parties. To his friends and admirers in Watertown, northern New York, New York state, and the United States, his passing is a great loss."

Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller in New York today extended condolences today to the family of Allen W. Dulles, former chief of the Central Intelligence Agency, who died late Wednesday in a Washington hospital.

The governor said he was "one of our nation's most dedicated public servants and a courageous fighter."

"He served our country with quiet distinction and a voice in the nation's highest councils will be missed," Rockefeller said.
